

Coping with a child's death is traumatic and isolating. A personal and moving story Dear Isobel tell the truth about that trauma and isolation through the eyes of both parents, and shows how individually they came to terms with their loss. Originally published in 1994 Georgiana has decided to write a chapter to show how she has turned what was a tragedy into a positive, and to show other that life can move forward. "Dear Isobel" was written so that other bereaved parents may feel less alone, and to explain to family and friends how they can offer support. There is advice on Bereavement by a Liaison Sister at Great Ormond Street Hospital who helped Georgiana and Piers Monckton through Isobel's illness and death, together with an information section containing details of organisations that support the bereaved.
